Horrible .--- A letter from Virginia Mines, Franklin county, Mo., dated the 19th inst., says. A case of poisoning occurred in this place last week, reports of which have probably reached you .--The simple facts are these: On Thursday, the 11th inst., Mrs. Breedlove, wife of John P. Breedlove, her child, a girl of eight years, and Breedlove's brother, Bristol were taken violently sick at supper .--Medical attendance was instantly procured, when every symptom indicated poison of the most violent nature. Mrs. B. lingered in the utmost suffering until the Sunday following, when she died. Her Dighton. body was opened by physicians, who were caused by poison. Suspicion rested on her husband, as there was a misunder. standing between them on Thursday morning, and he left in the afternoon of the same day for St Louis, but he returned yesterday, and appears seriously affec- Bedford, ted at the melancholy event. Wandering in Summer.

BY JOHN CLARES The geason now is all delight, Sweet smile the passing hours, And Summer's pleasures, at their height, Are sweet as are her flowers ; The purple morning waken'd soon, The mid-day's gleaming din, Gray evening with her silver moon,-Are sweet to mingle in.

How strange a scene has come to pass Since Summer 'gan its reign ! Spring flower's are buried in the grass, To sleep till Spring again ; Her dew drops Evening still receives To gild the morning hours ; But dew drops fall on open'd leaves, And moisten stranger-flowers.

The artless daisies' smiling face My wanderings find no more ; The king cops that supplied their place, Their golden race is o'er; And clover heads, with ruddy bloom, That blossom where these fell, Ere Autumn's fading mornings come Shall meet their grave as well.

The open flower, the loaded bough, The fields of spindling grain, Were blooming then the same as now, And so will bloom again : When with the past my being dies, Still summer sun's shall shine, And other eyes shall see them rise When death has darkened mine.

Reflection, with thy mortal shrouds When thou dost interfere, Though all is gay, what gloomy clouds Thy musings shadow here ! To think of summers yet to come, That I am not to see ! To think a weed is yet to bloom From dust that I shall be !

The misty clouds of purple hue Are fading from the eye; And ruddy streaks, which morning drew, Have left a dappled sky; The sun has call'd the bees abroad, Wet with the early hour, By toiling for the honey'd load Ere dews forsake the flower.

The woodbings, fresh with morning hours, Are what I love to see; The ivy-spreading darksome bowers Is where I love to be ; Left there, as when a boy, to lie And talk to flower and tree, And fancy in my costacy Their silence answers me.

. . . . To me how sweet the whispering winds, The woods again how sweet,— To find the peace which freedom finds, And from the world retreat ; To stretch beneath a spreading tree, That far its shadow shoots, While by its side the water tree Curls through its twisted roots.

And flowers these darksome woodlands rear, Whose shades they yearly claim, That Nature's wond'rous mystery wear And bloom without a name What different shapes in leaves are seen That o'er my head embower, Clad in as many shades of green As colours in the flower

domesticated for the purpose of affording a supply of its wool, which has been found applicable to a very beautiful manufacture. We observed in a late number of a periodical, that there was some expectation of introducing the Alpaca into this country on a large scale, for the purpose of wool-gathering; but an objection was hot, with the first service. raised, because, besides other adverse circumstances, the climate of Great Britain and Ireland was unsuitable. We beg to disabuse the public mind on this subject, as there can be no doubt as to the climate being suitable, the difficulty not to get these animals into this country in a healthy state. They continue very healthy, we are informed, until they reach the Cape of Good Hope, but after being very little longer at sea (either from | being so long at sea, or some defect of physical strength) they droop and dieat least to the extent of two-thirds. Some could be but on shore for a time at the Cape, and reembarking into a succeeding vessel. But be this managed as it may, At the Annual Election on the first we have seen a male and female of the Alpaca species at Graigbarnet, Lennox. town, Stirlingshire, which have been there for the last eight months, and they have stood the severe winter without injury, and we are assured are more hardy than our native sheep, -they require less food, and could exist where sheep would die. There seemes hardly to be any kind of food they will not eat; they eat turnips, hay, oats, and beans; they are more partial to meadow than rye grass hay. These animals are now in the health,-they are jet black, and follow their keeper like a dog, and are very elegant and interesting.
